These are unique times in healthcare. The Newfoundland and Labrador College of Physiotherapists (NLCP) recognizes the important role that physiotherapists play in the health and wellbeing of the residents of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Whether you work in a private practice clinic, a hospital, or any other setting where direct patient care is provided, the environment is challenging. The extraordinary effort that you are making to serve your patients and adhere to the instructions of public health experts are greatly appreciated.

The NLCP recognize that the situation is changing rapidly, which can lead to some uncertainty and anxiety. The amount of information circulating sometimes makes it difficult to know how to proceed. The NLCP is committed to providing guidance to help you make these challenging decisions.

The NLCP office is experiencing a higher than usual volume of inquiries to the office, however; we will continue to respond to direct member queries by phone or by email.

We will be adding a COVID-19 section on our website, to provide updates as more information becomes available or as direction from the College changes. In addition, we will identify useful links and resources, as they become available through our network of local, provincial and national contacts and partners.
